Nursing and Rehabilitative Care

A nursing home is a long-term care facility that offers room and board and health care services, including basic and skilled nursing care and rehabilitation services. Residents of nursing homes require regular health monitoring and ongoing care rather than intermittent nursing care. The individual is generally at a point in the health state where they need around the clock medical oversight and care with activities of daily living (ADL's). Most people who move into nursing home have exhausted all other living possibilities and must remain in the facility long-term. Some nursing facilities also have designated units that serve individuals that require more acute or specialized services such as rehabilitation or skilled care following a hospitalization. These services are generally provided for a short period of time and may be reimbursed through Medicare.
