A few questions that have been asked more than once.

Q: What can happen if I don’t call Miss Utility?
A: Digging without knowing the location of underground facilities could result in your damaging them. Damaging some underground facilities could result in serious injury, and other significant consequences.

Q: How do the utility companies mark my property?
A: The notified member facility/utility owners or their contract locators will use a colored solvent paint to identify the type of line that is underground. Please refer to the APWA color code reference.

Q: What right do locating technicians have to come onto my property?
A: The facility/utility owners need access to your property to complete their locating work based on an excavation notice/ticket. By identifying the underground service lines and following safe digging practices, property, health, life and services remain intact.

Q: Why do locating technicians use spray paint when flags are available?
A: Locators use a biodegradable spray paint that’s more reliable and long lasting than flags, which can be easily moved by wind or people.
